Our Child Labour Welfare Programme aims to rescue, rehabilitate, and empower child labourers, providing them with education, support, and opportunities for a brighter future.

Despite efforts to combat child labour, millions of children worldwide are still engaged in hazardous and exploitative work. Recent reports reveal the prevalence of child labour in various industries, including agriculture, manufacturing, construction, and domestic work.

Child labour has devastating consequences for children's physical, emotional, and psychological well-being. Recent studies highlight the risks of injury, illness, abuse, and exploitation faced by child labourers, as well as the long-term effects on their education, development, and future opportunities.

Poverty, lack of access to education, social exclusion, and inadequate legal protections are among the root causes of child labour. Recent socio-economic challenges, such as the COVID-19 pandemic, have exacerbated vulnerabilities and pushed more children into exploitative labour situations.

While legal frameworks exist to prohibit child labour and protect children's rights, enforcement remains a challenge in many regions. Recent efforts focus on strengthening legal protections, improving enforcement mechanisms, and enhancing collaboration between government agencies, civil society organizations, and other stakeholders.
